The bar chart gives information and compares twelve nations in terms of the total quantities of Olympic medals they achieved.

Overall, USA saw the highest number of medals, whereas Japan won the least quantity of medals. It is also noticeable that the rest of countries occupied relatively same numbers of medals in this Olympic event.

While USA attained a large number of units, with more than 2,250 medals in total, Japan ranked the least with only 400 units. Soviet Union ran second just after America, at 1000 medals that included over 400 gold prizes, compared to approximately 150 units of UK.

Germany, Italy, Sweden and Hungary obtained almost similar numbers of medals, with around 500 units for each country. There were higher quantities of medals for UK and France, which reached over 600 units. China, East Germany and Australia's athletes brought back to their homelands roughly 400 medals each.

SAMPLE WRITING TASK 2

In the modern era, education have a very crucial role to play as it acts as a foundation for country's future. Some people think that children should not be burdened by providing extra work for home while others have an opinion that additional work will benefit the children with their education. I am personally in the favor of latter viewpoint.

Homework can have many benefits. Firstly, it teaches a child to be more responsible towards his or her studies. Children are forced to work independently away from the environment of schools. This will encourage them to think individually and creatively in correspondence to a particular task. The mathematical problems, for instance, motivates the children to analyze and solve the problem on their own. Secondly, it promotes the time management skills in children. To enjoy their leisure time, students have to manage time efficiently in a way that their homework does not suffer. Thus, further improving disciplinary qualities in a child.

On the other hand, when children are not given additional work, they can inculcate sports in their daily routine. This can help them to improve their health. Moreover, after studying for long hours in school, children may need some free time to relax and rejuvenate themselves so as to start the next day refreshed. This will help them to concentrate more and can improve their productivity.

In my opinion, children should be given extra work as to make them ready for their future assignments and stress levels needed at university or later in the life. Otherwise, it may be possible that children stop taking education seriously.
