SAMPLE WRITING TASK 1

In the diagram life cycle of a honey bee is being shown. In general this cycle takes thirty-four to thirty-six days.

The cycle starts when females lay their eggs. Actually they lay one or two eggs once in every three days. Those eggs hatch after nine or ten days depending on environmental and genetical variations. After hatching of the eggs it took five days for nymphs to get out of their eggs. Since then they start emerging to young adults slowly. The nymphs can moult three times as they grow and in general this happens in fifteen days. It can be understood that they have become young adults by looking stripes on their back, if this stripes have emerged it means that the nymphs have become young adults. When they become young adults they have just one more step left for being a mature honey bee. That last step takes four days to become an adult. After being adult females start laying their eggs in three days and they continue their life as adult honey bees.

These days, more and more countries set the most important goal for their countries are the development of economic. In contrast, others believe there are different sectors also play the same important role for a country. In my opinion, although the rise of economic is exceedingly important, other elements are similarly weighty.

It is clear that economic growth acts a vital role in making a nation become better. The economy goes up which means per capita income increases, leading to a higher living standard. The superpowers all have the powerful economies that can make a lot of money which support to the country as a whole. For example, Taiwan had a significantly low average income before 1980; however, the economy had been rising 10% annually in average in more than 20 years. Eventually, the nation creatives better infrastructure, public transportation, health care for their citizens.

Besides the development of one's nation economy, some other aspects also need to be treated as important as economic rising. Poverty should also be one of the most concerning problems for central government. If an institution of a country can only benefits the specific classes then it is not an effective and fair government. The distance of the wealth and the poor in a society should also be consequently concerned because they both the rich and the poor represent a country. Human economic activities usually harm the environment which would not be preserved for our next generations if we do not have specific act to protect. For example, China's economy have been increasing dramatically in the last decades but the air polluted in their big cities are under pressure and it leads to many diseases to human other problems such as poverty, the gap between the rich and the poor, as well as environment protection should equivalently be taken care.

To sum up, it is truly right that economic growth is extremely important for a country. However,
